culture through the lens of race, specifically looking at the topics of multiculturalism and Indigenous Australians. To do this we will use various methods and materials such as official statistics, newspaper articles, movies, music, and other online resources. Important background information will also be presented in a lecture format. Although this course focuses primarily on the region of Australia, there will also be opportunities to use this learning as a foundation to investigate similar issues in New Zealand, Canada and the USA. Students will also be encouraged to reflect upon multiculturalism and indigenous issues as they relate to Japan. Various levels and types of language support will be made available as necessary in consultation with students. All classes will be taught in English.

法	It's important to try to go beyond stereotypes and superficial understandings of countries 学生へのメ ッセージ・ コメント	and regions. It takes time and effort to gain a deep and nuanced understanding of a country, and this is impossible to achieve through just one course. I hope this course sparks your interest in area studies, and gives you some initial skills that you can use to pursue your own interests.
